The European life sciences industry faces a confluence of powerful forces driving the adoption of ESG principles. Adhering to all aspects of CSRD, perfecting TCFD reporting, and staying ahead of upcoming biodiversity initiatives means companies must minimise their environmental footprint and ensure responsible sourcing. Additionally, growing investor and consumer demand for sustainable practices is putting pressure on life sciences companies to demonstrate their commitment to ESG. As a result, integrating ESG factors into core business strategies is no longer just optional, but essential for long-term success in the European market.

The ESG in Life Sciences Summit Europe 2024 will unite 60+ life sciences leaders in ESG, sustainability, CSR, and EHS across Europe, as well as other key stakeholders (such as governing bodies, regulators, investors, and healthcare systems) to provide a much-needed platform for industry-wide discussions on how life sciences can lead the forefront of global ESG advancement.

Hear from only the most far-ahead biopharmaceutical companies from the likes of Takeda, Sanofi, Ipsen, UCB, and more on how to:

- Communicate sustainable value creation to executive leadership to enable effective business transformation
- Build a roadmap to CSRD and other sustainable regulatory compliance to prepare for evolving global regulations
- Enhance sustainability across the life sciences supply chain
- Develop initiatives to promote health equity, reduce barriers to access, and contribute positively to communities

What Previous Attendees From the ESG in Life Sciences Summit US Have to Say:

Highly informative with leaders sharing successes and learnings in this fast-evolving space of ESG

Director Global Sustainability Program, Thermo Fisher Scientific

We're a small-medium biotech in the process of setting our ESG strategy and reporting, lots learned along the way
